

the world. It must, of course, have effect through immortal ideas once more set in motion, but while we are waiting for those ideas to bear fruit among men a revolution may break out and sweep us away. We should do as Buddha taught his disciples: preach, practice, promulgate, and illustrate our doctrines. He spoke to the meanest of men with effect, although having a deeper doctrine for greater and more learned minds. Let us, then, acquire the art of practical exposition of ethics based on our theories and enforced by the fact of Universal Brotherhood." ["What Our Society Needs Most," Echoes of the Orient 1:279-81]

THEOSOPHIA
A Living Philosophy For Humanity
Volume VIII
No. 6 (48) - March-April 1952